A context switch is when the CPU stops one thread and starts another by switching registers.

The scheduler picks the next thread. It just chooses whatever is ready.

A page fault is when memory is not there and must be loaded.

Locks can be slow because they block threads.

A system call is the user asking the kernel to do something.